A Twitter user who shall remain nameless made a tweet about a problem with an image macro involving his entire life. He wanted a script to make a video of him performing each and every one of these actions. In the same way, we came up with KEYMACRO, a script that does just that. For starters, the script has options to enable an auto-update for the script. The browser should then automatically be opened with a new tab. As you'll notice, this feature includes the ability to enable the external website manager. The script can also be used to insert text within a web page. In order to do so, it has a context menu option for each icon in the add-on's interface. The script also features a shortcut keystroke, thus allowing you to edit text in an already existing page. Once the website is finished, you can open a window to save it as a video and insert it directly into a tweet. The animation between each video element is hidden behind an interface in the background. To move from one video to another, just scroll to the respective spot using the small buttons in the script's interface. Pros & Cons The script has options to be used by everyone on your computer. However, you cannot edit the videos by hand. Instead, they are created within the script itself. This allows a user to be in control over the changes. On the flip side, it also means that you can be editing one of your video files and the script will have already been saved with a new video element. Due to its functionality, KEYMACRO comes with options to turn off the autoupdate. In order to do so, use the respective option in the script's configuration. What's In The Box Not only is the script a video editor, it is also a website manager, which means you can change the layout and some settings of the website once it's launched. The script comes in a folder that looks like so: KEYMACRO - The configuration file, which you can read about within our tutorial - The edit windows, which are simply text boxes to edit the displayed website - The web templates, which include the web pages themselves - A basic video editor, which allows you to add text to the video - A tweet manager, which means you can edit tweets directly within the script What You Can Do With KEYMACRO Since you can't edit the websites by hand, it's only possible to add text or a picture to 77a5ca646e

Speed Dial for Google Chrome provides a simple way to add frequently visited websites to a handy page within the browser. Speed Dial is simple to use, by dragging-and-dropping sites into the tabs and opening them with a click on the site you want to navigate to. Speed Dial's home page is setup to show you the most commonly visited sites, sorted by most recent in-order to be most useful. From the home page, click on a link, and it will open in a new tab, replacing the current home page. You can also add your own sites from a list, by dragging and dropping them into the window, and then choosing your favorite. Do you use speed dial? Let us know what you think about it! Add speed dial to Chrome's context menu Add speed dial to Chrome's context menu You can use the "New Tab" feature in Google Chrome to easily add websites to your speed dial. While you're in Chrome's main menu, you can type ctrl+p into the Search box and then choose the "New Tab" option from the context menu that appears. Drag and drop websites from the list of frequently visited sites into your new tab, and then type in the address of the site into the address bar of your new tab. The sites you drop onto your speed dial will appear in your new tab. This speeds up the opening of websites and it can make things a lot easier if you use the internet a lot.
