10 Video Essentials V components, each with multiple presets that can be easily modified and applied in seconds. One or two objects can be highlighted in the entire video with the help of Selective Focus. The selected object can be blured to enhance the visibility of the highlighted area, and the whole of the object is also slightly modified. This package contains a whole bunch of components that allow taking advantage of any other component of the same category to achieve a desired effect. For example, adding a sharp focus to an object is possible with the Progressive Stretch component. There are plenty of components included in this collection, so you can adjust the whole video even without using any other component. All you need to do is to adjust the parameters and then save the results. To make the most of the components, you'll need to create new presets and alter the settings with the help of sliders and other parameters. To save time and effort, you can get the rest of the settings pre-adjusted, so you'll be able to save only the settings you want and avoid any additional work. The V component included in the collection is a good example of this; using the presets included in the package, it is possible to quickly get the results that are good enough for the project, and the set-up process is extremely simple. Key features: – Quickly alter settings that are suitable for use with any component – Supports multiple presets and individual settings – Easy to use The second version of NewBlue Video Essentials Collection for Final Cut Pro is ready to use. It includes eight components: Alpha Processor, Old TV, Color Fixer Pro, Outline, Progressive Stretch, Selective Color, Selective Focus and View Finder. The same way the first version of the package was easy to use and had plenty of presets to work with, so is this one. Applying the right effect to the video is as simple as adjusting the settings; the only thing to remember is that you have to apply effects to the main object of the video and do it before you export it to your editor. Alpha Processor component The default settings of this component produce a softness effect, resulting in an image that looks just like what is broadcast in television. The sliders allow you to vary the brightness of the image; therefore, the effect that is being produced is one of a soft brightness. When the settings are made to reach maximum results, the image will become extremely soft
