A simple extension for Firefox. Just drag and drop multiple links/ checkboxes. Show More Comments What's new in this version Version 1.1.2: Added "Open URL on New Tab" and "Save as..." Fixed "Open in Another Window" and "Open in New Window" During the first few days of fall training camp, defensive line coach Brentson Buckner offered a scouting report on the first-team defensive linemen. Buckner called out Jabaal Sheard and Vinny Curry as the leaders of the group. He also said that Adam Butler, Brandon Graham and Timmy Jernigan would probably be the top-four defensive ends. As the season moved along, the competition continued between Sheard and Curry, the two defensive tackles vying for the starting spot. When Curry was sidelined with an illness, Sheard ended up starting for Curry against the Packers. The question became how would the Patriots handle the change? After the game, Belichick stated that Sheard would return to being the starting defensive tackle. However, in Week 2, Curry returned from the illness and looked better than he did when he was sidelined. On top of that, the Patriots lost Chris Jones to a groin injury. When you look at the numbers though, it looks like Sheard might be the better player. In four games, Sheard has registered four sacks, a forced fumble and five quarterback hits. Curry has collected just one sack, no forced fumbles and five quarterback hits. In the offseason, the Patriots brought in Sheldon Richardson to play at defensive tackle. Richardson was a player that was regarded by many as the best defensive tackle in the NFL before the 2015 season. During training camp last year, he was seen as the favorite to start alongside Vince Wilfork, but he didn't start the first five games of the season. After the bye week, he was named the starting nose tackle. In the preseason, Richardson had a great season, but he had to sit for a half of the preseason game with a hamstring injury. In Week 4, the Patriots started playing Brandon Vincent at defensive tackle in Richardson's place. It looked like it might be the case again in Week 5,
