Pawns.) of the director of the Department of Health and Family Services or its designee, shall determine whether the matter may be pursued by the department as a violation of section 10 or other sections of this title or as an ordinance violation. If the investigator determines that there is probable cause to believe that the matter may be pursued by the department as a violation of section 10 or other sections of this title or as an ordinance violation, the investigatory body may seek a warrant from a district or circuit court, upon request of the investigator, requiring the person to appear in court to answer a charge against him of a violation of section 10 or other sections of this title or as an ordinance violation. 20 Id. sec. 10(a). 21 In pertinent part, section 13 of the Act states: 22 In every prosecution for any violation of this title or any ordinance in any county, city, or town in this state, or for violating any statute, charter, ordinance, or other written law of the state, such county, city, or town, the county attorney, city attorney, or town attorney, as the case may be, shall represent the public in the prosecution. 23 Id. sec. 13. 24 The Task Force argued in its letter, and PPG contends on appeal, that the Act does not apply to the actions by the City in this case because the City acted in a regulatory capacity, rather than as a public prosecutor. However, a number of courts have declined to give controlling weight to the form in which a governmental entity is acting when reviewing whether a city has violated state law. And even if a user has the right for the device, it can still be stolen if the device is stolen and used to access the user's credentials. The examples above highlights the broad range of dangers that come from third-party access to stored credentials. In the first example, the risk is that third-party access to the information stored on a device could be malicious and take down the business. In the second example, the risk is that the access granted to a device could be malicious, but this time the risk is that the device is stolen and used to access the user's information. In the third example, a device could be stolen and used to access the information, and this could be malicious or just a loss. How to securely store credentials To mitigate these risks, it is important that organizations have full access to the data stored on the devices that they manage. This is not only to prevent the devices being stolen, but also to give security teams the opportunity to spot unauthorised access to user data. Further, organizations need to be aware of their liability when devices are stolen or lost. If the device is stolen and used to access a user's credentials, they could be held liable for any data exposed. This is why we recommend maintaining a clean back-up version of the device to ensure full access to the device is not lost if it is stolen or destroyed. In addition, users need to be educated on the risks of storing credentials. Users
