When you first lay your eyes upon the newly redesigned world, the first thing you may notice is the sparkling river. The river in Tarnished has become even nicer, richer in detail. The main river of the world, the Kinkaku River, now is flanked by two high bridges, and also has two branches, each of which is joined to the other. You can take a boat onto it, sail it along, or even catch a fish, and great fish like trout and tuna can also be found there.

WOMEN'S WRESTLING Wrestlemania this year is in New York, and it has the potential to be the greatest show ever. A few key points: wrestling is a division of sports, whereas MMA is a sport within a sport. Also, if you're used to the "big boys" wrestling, you're not going to be able to enjoy just a cursory exposure to this style. By rights, it should just be less grotesque than it's MM rival. It's a real question, though, if anyone can come up with a narrative that can outweigh it's grotesque human flaws, real (and imagined) or not. If it's not a spectacular spectacle, it's just going to be the wrestling you grew up with with the additional toxic waste of steroid and testosterone. Overall I think the world needs to know that there's more to this, and it takes a fairly broad and open minded approach to appreciate it. There will be a lot of blood, a lot of faces getting cut, some gross work that men have never even thought of doing. What it is: ... is a blend of an MMA-style fight, heavy emphasis on submission, and raw power. It's a never ending horse race, and it's done at a weight less than what the MMA competitors are used to. What it is Not: It's not a show. It's just a fight. If you think a dog can find enough balls to make a seven minute MMA fight, then you've never watched wrestling. How I feel about it: It's vastly different from anything I've ever seen. The extreme nature of it is actually a benefit to the audience because there are some elements that challenge our preconceived notions of what's acceptable. My favorite moment(s): Looking at this picture this morning, I was unable to move my gaze from the first two frames."Happiness is a modern invention, as likely to be found in cellars as attics and as much subject to being stolen, conjured away, and lost, as anywhere." -Rainer Maria Rilke "An authentic self that can find its own way in the world requires a certain amount of psychotherapy, and no drug can help the process along bff6b2d33

Who hasn't been under the dread fate of God? Here's a novel that looks at just how real the God is (not that I need to say that); nay, a novel that we need to learn lessons from and recognize for its ability to dazzle.

Well, the premise may set off a brief outburst of nervous babbling: "Our first story picks up where history leaves off: the world of 5000 years ago."

"The Gods shall have their servants...." This novel serves as a series of fragments addressing the confines and settings of a "God Time." However, this hides the brilliance on display for those willing to look.

Tolkien is understood to have stated that his non-fictional life began in his mind with the heart of an aged elf. The novelty here is that this heart is hardly aged; rather, it is like a sword that cuts through the universe
