unexpected exchange transfusion in a child with sickle cell disease. An unusual case of transfusion-related iron deposition, consisting of an aberrant "cartwheel"-like pattern in the liver due to an exchange transfusion, is reported in a 2-year-old boy with sickle cell disease. After the exchange transfusion, biochemical tests revealed a hyperferritinemia and a positive iron stain in the reticuloendothelial system. This is the first observation of non-heme iron deposition after exchange transfusion in our experience and suggests that the distribution of heme and non-heme iron may be the main reason for the iron deposition in the liver. The clinical significance of this finding is not clear at present.

18 Dec 2011 11:04:53 +0000 developer of innovative browser-based MMO action RPG Neverwinter, today announced that it is available in a digital shrink wrap retail package for just $29.99. Before we try to wrap our heads around exactly what that means, let's run through the specs: The game does not use Flash as its game engine of choice, choosing instead a browser-based proprietary game engine to deliver asynchronous multiplayer play, a fully node-based economy, and action dungeon and arena game-play. The player market is bordered by the edges of the map into an open world game where players can freely move around and meet in the vast spaces between their locations. Multiplayer support features up to 12 simultaneous, asynchronous players and features in-game guilds. Ten player dungeons are stuffed into the new game, offering players an incredible amount of game-play with a core emphasis on exploration and the quest experience. Dungeons are split into five sections providing a five step storyline based on your choices, player actions and choices during your travels. Your mission is to protect a small royal trade caravan against a host of threats as it traverses the dangerous and frightening wilderness. The over 800 piece of armor and weapon equipment which can be forged, designed or upgraded, can be used across all unlocked content, so players can equip and upgrade multiple weapon and armor sets. When equipped, customizations will be visible both to other players and on the character's player-self. Other features include crafting ability, player-controlled guild and master guild system options, player trading ability that seamlessly delivers everything you need from the item you have in your inventory to what you have yet to obtain, and an experienced crafting, tanking, and master job system. Rubio is the floor leader of the Republican leadership in the Senate and chairs the Foreign Relations Committee. He received the Christian Science Monitor's 2013 Robert Novak Award for his leadership on religious liberty issues. He's issued a comprehensive list of the priorities the United States will take on in the foreign policy arena, including an emphasis on U.N. reform, rethinking America's foreign aid and defense policy, and a move on the Middle East that includes halting further financing of the Palestinian Authority. "The United Nations and the foreign aid that it receives are institutions that we should pay attention to," Rubio said. operation that is the hope for the world," Rubio said. "In reality, it's a great-sounding law enforcement agency, a revolving door of self-interested and corrupt individuals." Paying too much attention to the United Nations would be a mistake for the U.S., Rubio said. He has called for scaling back U.S. spending at the United Nations. "The United States should be looking for opportunities with the United Nations to do good things," Rubio said. "We should be seeking out opportunities to advance foreign policy objectives, to promote peace, to try to spread democratic values and to help the people of the world. And we should be looking for opportunities that we can do with less money." That may or may not be possible, Rubio said, depending on what members of the U.N. want from the U.S. "If they're going to demand that we spend billions of dollars on a peacekeeping operation in the Congo that we're already paying less than we are for the missions in Kosovo and Afghanistan, well, then you
