Quebec Is Officially a Living Wage State With news of the announcement of Quebec becoming a living wage state at the provincial level on

March 11, 2019, there's now reason to expect these newly elected lawmakers to work on increasing the minimum wage of workers across the province, and to doing so on a voluntary basis. The province announced last April that it would become the 10th living wage state in Canada — the first one in the country to do so at the provincial level. Quebec is also the first Canadian province to regulate the issue at the provincial level. Employers of workers under the age of 18 or 55 or older must pay them a rate of at least $11 per hour. An employer must also pay a minimum of $13 an hour for work performed by minors. The new measures took effect on July 1, 2019. Quebec is the first Canadian province to regulate the issue at the provincial level Governor General Julie Payette made the announcement at a press conference at the Quebec National Assembly in the Sainte-Famille building in Quebec City, before presenting a cheque on behalf of the Treasury's Minister of Finance, Carlos Leitao. "Today, people living in Quebec will be better off," said Payette. "We want them to be better off on their own," said Payette. In late December 2018, National Assembly members voted to lower the age limit to 18 for workers under the age of 55, and to 56 for workers older than 55. "We shouldn't wait until a worker is old and replaced," said Payette. She said the change will allow more young people to enter the job market and find a job that pays a living wage. Janet Duncan-Fontaine, president of the Quebec Community Workers' Union, said that almost 10 percent of Quebec's workforce does not receive any form of social assistance. However, she stressed that those who are already employed will benefit from the minimum wage hike as well. "We don't want to
