The issue in this case was not the hospital's refusal to admit uninsured patients, but the hospital's overall policy of adhering to a rigid charting schedule. This case does not concern the issue of a hospital's duty to provide a service. It concerns only the way the hospital chooses to conduct its business. It may be that the hospital's chosen method of conducting business imposed upon the appellants a greater burden than they should have been under the circumstances. It is clear that the hospital's overall policy in the area of medical charting was not so unreasonable that it should be held to be an actionable negligence. There was no evidence that the hospital's policy did anything more than carry out the hospital's avowed purpose of encouraging the staff to record more carefully the basic aspects of the patient's history. It is not a matter of common knowledge that a patient's history is a vital part of the medical record, and as a matter of fact the question of recording important *1149 data and the possible hazards of failing to do so are fairly debatable, and no one had ever been injured by the failure to observe the charting practices of the hospital. We hold that the hospital's overall policy did not constitute actionable negligence. There is no question but that the hospital knew or should have known that patients were concealing from medical personnel information which they wished to avoid, and that because of this concealment the hospital staff was not accurately recording the patient's history. What the hospital did in response to the information given to it by the patients is not an issue in this case. The hospital may have been negligent by its overall charting policy but not by its response to the information given to it. Judgment affirmed. Banks, P.J., and Peavlers, J., concur. 1. (kostenlose Downloads) Link zur Website von jaycona.comCombination of imatinib and thalidomide leads to augmented autophagic cell death in an EML4-ALK rearranged cell line. In this study, we explored the mechanism of a combination of imatinib and thalidomide against the EML4-ALK rearranged cell line, GK-1. GK-1 cells were treated with the combination of imatinib and thalidomide in vitro. A combination of imatinib and thalidomide significantly decreased cell viability compared with the effects of either drug alone at 7 days after treatment. Both imatinib and thalidomide alone caused less prominent autophagic cell death, but the combination of imatinib and thalidomide induced autophagy in a dose-dependent manner. Moreover, the combination of imatinib and thalidomide induced caspase-independent apoptosis. Moreover, the combination of imatinib and thalidomide at low dose increased LC3-II and degraded p62 protein levels, suggesting that it increased autophagy. In conclusion, imatinib plus thalidomide overcomes the resistance to caspase-dependent apoptosis by increasing autophagic cell death.// Copyright 2015 The Go Authors.
