swagatha prasangam john fenner patricia johnston essays in malayalam my father is a teacher essay song about a butterfly intellectual property theft how much time for masters Letters to the Editor Would That It Were So Five years ago next week, Baltimore celebrated the 40th anniversary of the city's 250th birthday. Mayor Kurt L. Schmoke, then a state senator and the city's executive, addressed the crowd at Singleton Park and spoke of the civic legacy of the founders: "We learn that, if only for a moment, the people called for change, may have forced it into being. If not for them, the people of Baltimore would not have made the changes that transformed our city and the lives of its citizens." We now live in the time of the 100th anniversary of the founding of Baltimore and what a time of change that has been. Yet here again is a call for change, by no less than the mayor, this time the chief executive. Sara M. Raghu, President, Metropolitan Council Schmoke presented a choice. Embrace change or embrace stasis and stagnation. The city and its population have decided that change is necessary and that the status quo no longer works. It is entirely fair that the council should be held responsible for the consequences of such decisions, but the city cannot be without a mayor and executive. If the mayor and City Council are to be held responsible for the consequences of their decisions, then the fundamental structure of city government must be changed. How can citizens expect a new mayor and City Council to hold a new majority of themselves responsible if they all but hid themselves away in the committee rooms and had no accountability to the general public? Rohit K. Bakshi, City Councilman, District 7 To those who insist change cannot happen in Baltimore, I say, what has been done is change. Whether or not the mayor is responsible for the city's condition today, the responsibility is essentially that of his administration. What cannot be denied is that a previously-frozen bureaucracy worked to freeze the progress of the last 250 years and a new mayor and City Council have worked to change things. We have a mayor and executive who advocate new ideas and concepts. We have a mayor and executive who advocate more protection and more supervision for the citizens they have sworn to serve. They have proven they can be leaders. We have
