> Megalith Studio is doing a fantastic job with MV. It's amazing to see that MV is being developed on the same engine as BBS, just a few years apart. This in effect demonstrates how much MV's engine has matured. > For the last couple of years we've been seeing many 2D MMORPGs come into being. Whether it's a free-to-play game or a sequel to an existing product, they all have the same gameplay formula. They're all based on real-time combat, skills are generated at random, they all have PvP, and they all require constant grinding in order to improve. This game is no different, in fact, it's a much better game than its predecessors. > Even with this new game type, RPG Maker still has the best overall game-making toolset. New elements can be generated at any time. With their use, we get a completely new experience. Players with a couple of years of experience can actually produce something new and create new content. !
