What's new:

: “But of course he’s not a good person.” But yes he is a man who pisses people off to the very end. But the reason he has all that rage is that his last forty-something years he’s been lying to and to and to. He finally gets his comeuppance. On top of all of his behavior and his lies...he's gonna have to pay for that sin. On the other hand, everything he's done has actually been okayed by the original Les. I’m not saying he’s “not a bad person.” I’m not saying the voiceover ever said he’s “not a bad person.” What I’m saying is what you’ve just said, “[t]he reason he has all that rage is that he’s been lying to and to and to.” And I said, “People don’t lie to someone and then they pay with their lives.” You’re saying, “But this is what Les is up to, but this is not what Les is up to, but he paid with his life.” There are things that can have many interpretations. But yeah, Les was so nice about it and nice about Caris, nice about Rashidi, nice about a million things. And then he has such an unrepentant attitude when his whole world comes crashing down. And that's the nice thing about writing something the right away and not planning everything out. That's why they let someone like Stephen King write what he writes. I think of writers like Lester Doe, women writers I’ve gotten to know on the Internet, I never saw a woman who could write like that. And I think there’s a place for it and there’s a need for it. I can say you would never read a Lester Doe. I don’t care if he is a woman. They’re incredible. But I would never write them. I find them strangely appealing, but also frightening. That is the thing about Lester Doe. We start out with what we know—that there’s a lot of verisimilitude to it. The rhythms are similar. It is not perfect, but it is close. You can't come

“In every time there is a great leader, one who stirs up the people and leads them. A man who is loved and feared at the same time. Such is the figure of King Sven. The King, though an early arrival in Fyreslit, is far from being a newcomer. Long ago there was a great battle between the elves and the orcs. The two races though greatly outnumbered, managed to hold out due to the foresight and virtue of King Sven. The orcs called him the Great Lord and considered him the saviour of their race. The Battle of the Cragtop Mountains was the beginning of all the ills that the orcs brought upon the elves. The orcs overran the lands of the elves and a centuries long cycle of slaying and enslaving ensued. To meet the enemies and raise an army to fight them was the first task of a young leader. A great number of people gathered with their axes, their swords, their bows and their steeds. The whole community was unified in the cause and all were called to arms. And so a famous campaign took place and it proved that the elves could fight back against their cruel oppressors. The elves were victorious against the hordes of the orcs and it was at that time when King Sven gained his authority and his seat of power in Fyreslit. He was a wise leader, a great warrior, a pillar of strength to the elves. He gathered a strong army, rounded up his citizens to fight against the orcs and led an epic campaign. The people of Fyreslit were united
