During its colonial period, Guatemalan music was primarily brought over from Spain and Mexico, with some indigenous and African elements. During the 1930s, a revival of traditional Guatemalan music began, including the Folkloric Music Revivals and Guarani musical movements. Current music is increasingly urban, youth, and nationalistic, and is also influenced by European styles such as jazz and rock. Guatemalan music has greatly increased in popularity, especially since the 1980s and 1990s. Many Guatemalans have taken a keen interest in learning about their musical heritage. Guatemala has had little current influence from Latin America. Most of the music is a combination of local and foreign influences. Musical instruments Most instruments used in Guatemalan folk music include the flute (bajo de varas), the violin (violin), the guitar, the conga (sensa), and the ponche (the drum head and bass drum). The harp (de varas) is also utilized in folk music. Popular genres Popular music Guatemala is increasingly embracing pop and rock music. Guatemalan styles in genres such as Spanish-speaking Latin pop and dance are beginning to spread from Guatemala City to Guatemala's rural areas. Popular Guatemalan artists that perform music include Reik, Cheka, Marucha, Nelly Camino, and Carlos Vives. Reik, whose music is influenced by the African American rhythms from Brazil, Spain, and Cuba, as well as his home country's indigenous roots, is the most successful performer in terms of income. Alternative genres Guatemalan alternative rock, incorporating rock, punk, and Afrobeat, has become increasingly popular since the 1990s. Rock stars include the Leyendas (Led Zeppelin / Led Zeppelin II), Vanesa, Fabiola, Gritos Boricuas, Skamias, Jet Skis, and Los Pacifista. A prominent example of alternative rock from the 1970s is FrÃ¡giles (Wolves). The 1990s saw the emergence of Afrobeat artists such as Mala 1cdb36666d

[16] Plaintiff did not request leave to file an amended pleading, nor did plaintiff move for leave to file an amended pleading. [17] The Court's factual findings relating to the regulations are only relevant to the question of whether defendant violated any of its own regulations. [18] Plaintiff also argues that the FHA did not require defendant to view the site prior to engaging in the construction. The Court agrees. The Code provided that defendant should have reviewed the site prior to starting. (Code § 4-7(E)(2)(a).) Although defendant did not view the site prior to construction, the Code does not contain a requirement that defendant must have reviewed the site prior to construction. Thus, defendant's actions did not violate the Code. [19] Defendant argues that plaintiff's action is barred by the FHA because plaintiff allowed its predecessor in title to continue construction after the building was constructed. Defendant did not raise this argument in its answer or in its trial brief. However, a district court is not limited to the pleadings when the issue is raised sua sponte. Local 290, I.U.O.E. v. Colorado, 728 F.2d 1092, 1096 (10th Cir.1984) ("a party is not barred from raising an issue on which it did not rely at trial"). The Court notes that defendant has produced evidence that it provided a disclaimer to the purchaser of the site property before construction began. In light of defendant's failure to raise this issue until the conclusion of the bench trial, the Court concludes that this is a newly raised defense not supported by the evidence. The Court will consider this defense as part of the Court's findings of fact.
