year is 25th overall and a first-rounder next year, a third next year, that's a fair price to pay for an asset," he said. "But if your value is to be a role player that can play a top-four defender for at least a couple of years, you have to be sure the building is going in that direction." That sentiment was echoed by other GMs. "I am very open-minded about this," said Montreal's Marc Bergevin at the trading deadline in February. "I am always very open to everything." At last week's conference, GMs at the

GM meetings in Boca Raton, Fla., wondered if the league would explore different ways to punish players who aren't on the ice for goals or other statistics. "I think that's a really good idea," said one. Familiar rules exist for diving.
