sectarian group has donated to a charity set up to raise funds for the victims of the Ebola epidemic in Africa. The Islamic Human Rights Commission (IHRC) is understood to have donated £25,000 to the Jo Johnson-founded Dawn Foundation, which was set up by the Foreign Secretary's brother, Will, who is the son of late former prime minister Sir Alec Douglas-Home. An IHRC spokeswoman said the donation, which has been matched by a donor in the Islamic community, was made "specifically for the Dawn Foundation to use as they see fit". The charity has also raised over £1 million for the NHS by selling York Minster daisies. Dawn Foundation funding for a year, starting in July, is estimated 1cdb36666d

"I hope he is not a young man. But if he is a young man... I hope he will understand that he did not do anything good," the 12-year-old said. The girl, whose name was not released, told CNN that she went to school Monday as usual, then returned home from the school bus stop where about 30 students were waiting with their parents. "We took our bags and our coats. We were just walking home. We went to the forest. It was after three o'clock in the afternoon. There were two girls and one guy in the forest," she said. The attacker asked the girl if she had a boyfriend, then pushed her down, ripped off her pants and took her panties off before raping her, she said. The boy then forced her to walk into the woods, which is about a half-mile away from the forest the school was in. "He told me 'don't run, don't run, I will catch you,'" the girl said. The boy beat the girl so badly that it took her family a week to find her in the woods, the girl said. She suffered a broken arm and a twisted ankle from the beating, and has a scar on her head. She is being treated for a severe lack of nutrition and had an operation on her arm, she said. The boy was 17-year-old Michael R., who is
