study of spatial and spectral non-uniformities of the spectral reflectance of soil surface]. Based on the theory of surface reflectance and the dual-band radiometer, a method of measuring the spectral reflectance of the soil surface is proposed in this paper. The reflection from the soil surface was divided into five zones with different slope angles. The optical properties of these zones were discussed.

The potential applications of this method are in mapping of surface soil moisture, spectral emissivity and soil organic matter.

"context" // Executor replaces a block of code to be executed with a function that returns // a result. // // The Executor interface is a functional interface, like golang's built-in // sync.Pool. It is used only for execution. If a context is already set, // the Executor function simply delegates to the existing context. // // Executors provide several advantages over the sync.Pool type. They can be // easily goroutine-local, meaning that each context contains only one // executor. They offer better thread safety guarantees.
