The Universal Indian Database covers all aspects of Indian languages and is currently being used by 65,000 people. A new universal database of the Indian languages will be launched this week in the run-up to the world's biggest language event, the United Nations' International Mother Language Day. The database, hosted on open-source platform LINGUAS, will include resources in the Assamese, Bengali, Bodo, Gujarati, Hindi, Kannada, Kashmiri, Konkani, Oriya, Parsi, Punjabi, Sanskrit, Tamil, Telugu, Urdu, as well as various other Indo-Aryan and Dravidian languages. In India, the year-long International Mother Language Day has been observed since 2007. The event was designed to celebrate the rich and varied Indo-European languages and to promote the values of linguistic diversity and cultural diversity. Project coordinator and Systems Linguist John McWhorter at the University of California, Davis, told IANS: "We are in the unique position of being a nation which
