Adobe Illustrator is the vector (raster) program from Adobe. Illustrator is the digital equivalent of the designer's toolbox or sketchbook, and works just like a pen or pencil on a paper illustration. While Adobe has produced tutorials for beginners, only a few are freely available. Both programs are used primarily to create images, but others use Adobe Photoshop and Illustrator to create photo-editing and video effects. Which is best? That depends on your purpose. Adobe Illustrator makes it easier to type and make many different kinds of edits. It does not have the drawing tools that Photoshop has, but it makes for a simpler edit and gives vector images more versatility than raster images (which are pixelated). Illustrator can do vector graphics, Photoshop can do everything. The Importance of Vector vs. Raster Most of us think of creating images in raster format. Q: Cache_page should be specified if using FOP I am using FOP 2.1.2, Maven plugin version is 2.5.1. I am fetching 200 pages of PDF file. This FOP is used for rendering an XML file. At the beginning of the process I am getting the following error: cache_page should be specified if using FOP The output generated by FOP is a tar file, and that tar file size is 350 GBs. I am using GZIP to compress the tar file, due to this issue the rendering process failed. A: I did not use the cache option in the FOP jar, but I used -mergeAll=true So it was caching by default. Neiðja Neiðja (Old Norse: "New Week") is the name of the sixth and last week of the year in the early Viking-age Nordic Calendar. The terminology appears in the plural, while the actual name of the week in Old Norse was nefndr. Compare nefndr son of nefndr, nefndr's son, nefndr's week. I'm creating a CorePlot graph with Swift and I'm encountering a problem when converting an NSNumber to a CFNumberRef. Glitch in Apple Mac OS - tomh ===== tomh I was surprised at the price too (from the teardown). $1800. iPhone 4S will probably cost the same from Apple's point of view (if I did the maths correctly - seriously, $1800 for a bit of scrap metal is really fair). ~~~ siriit Apple routinely uses their IP with their competitors, but not their goods. So the price is higher than in real sense. ~~~ jamesaguilar I don't think it's any secret that Apple does stuff like this. That doesn't make it right, though. ~~~ siriit The thing is that they prefer to maintain secrecy on the knowings and not publicise them. Not that it matters too much. The "contract" is out there, it's just that publicising such information is not helping them or the public. Having said that, I feel Apple benefits from the exposure. It's just that they're not being upfront about it. ----- jamesaguilar I'm more interested in who they've been selling it to. It seems risky to sell brand-name hardware to the average consumer. They must have put something of a risk premium on it. ~~~ jacques_chester Apple's engineering teams appear to be comfortable with that because they could just resell the motherboards. It'd be interesting if they go the route of the Macbook and don't produce any consumer-grade product. ~~~ wmf If Apple only sells to resellers there'd be no need to disassemble the Macbooks or Mac Minis. ~~~ jacques_chester That's possible. We'll know for sure when Apple releases their IPO filing. ----- jfoutz As much as I love hacking stuff, I'm still shocked at how much is in a mini. 5 gigs of memory and 48gigs of flash, for just under $1,000. We make medical devices in quantities of a few tens of thousands, everything from thin film coating to manufacturing. An order of magnitude difference. We also don
