Does anyone know if this is true? I think I could afford the $3,200.00 license key. It would be nice to be able to print, view in 3D, and see. It sounds like this is what Avanquest is offering but I would like to. A picture is worth a thousand words. I used to own a very expensive professional. A: Either the model you are asking about (available at SketchUp.com with the title "Long Bamboo House" -- there are many at the site) or the SPA in the shape of the "Lena" in SketchUp is not built on Google 3D Warehouse. It is designed and licensed by Avanquest and the purchase price can be found in the Material Designers' Catalog from Google as well as in the Material Designers' Catalog 2.0, for an annual fee. If you do a search on SketchUp and you find this furniture item you are looking for, you can view the source 3D model on the SketchUp.com Web page for the model.

Q: How to Make API Login? Im working on a Web Portal for some client and he has asked to make it highly secure. I was thinking of making the API login based on login and password, but then the problem I have is that if someone goes and scrapes all the pages, then they can also know what the password is. Is there a way of connecting to the website and authenticate user against the API? Are there any other ways of authenticating users against the website? A: Remember login/password only should be encrypted, not stored as they are very easy to hack. If you must have login/password to make an API, you have few options: Store it encrypted and key is not stored in your database Encrypt it with a key from database and decrypt it inside API for each call There is a book by John Fox, Named Pipes and the “the TRUSTED systems (TM)”: Web Server Security Chapter 2 – Security Systems for HTTP APIs Here is a site that has a detailed description of the best security options for HTTP APIs: Patch-based segmentation of tumor-infiltrating lymphocytes from mammography. In this paper
