I had just finished cleaning everything up in my room and since I had prepared for back-to-school, I realized I should have began my lesson on time. After doing so, I quickly worked on preparing a few more things that I should have done in the past few days. I don't consider myself a procrastinator, but every now and then I do procrastinate and get behind on certain things. This time it was the case and since I have taught for less than a year, I was a little bit behind. My lesson was the first class of the day. During this lesson, we went over the rules and responsibilities of the class. I gave a short introduction about my classroom and what I expect of

The presidents of the armed services committees for both the Democratic and Republican Parties issued statements Tuesday afternoon reassuring the defense industry and the military men and women that nominations of Sarah Palin and Barack Obama are compatible and that the two parties have no problem with each other. The same concerns were expressed by the Republican and Democratic Surgeons General, and Navy and Air Force Generals under different circumstances. The Democratic Statement was signed by Senators Chuck Hagel of Nebraska and John Warner of Virginia. The Republican statement was signed by Senator John Warner, who chairs the Senate Armed Services Committee, along with Senator Bill Nelson of Florida. The Democrats' statement is slightly longer, although the content is identical. Reminding people that "Another administration learned a lot from the last one, and we will be sure to listen," the statement makes note of the fact that the Army has withdrawn from Iraq. What is left of the military with all this withdrawal? "The armed services further note that any review will be based on the best available data," the statement continues. The Republican and Democratic statements make a strong case that the two parties have put the feud between themselves behind them. There is no doubt that a military man cannot be nominated by both parties. The statement points out that David

Quammen, on the other hand, is a declared Republican, known as the candidate of the anti-tax party. The statement is signed by both Warner and Hagel. It cites the concerns of the armed services, both the force, and the families of servicemen and women, of the recent escalation in positions of the Taliban. "The armed services further believe that the right candidate is available for the presidency," the statement concludes. "They are also urged that any discussion of military matters be based solely on the best available intelligence and
