The gelation properties of a poly(carbonate ester)-block-poly(2-ethylhexyl acrylate) (PCEA-b-P2EA) are studied in detail by using rheometry, turbidimetry, and light scattering. We find that a PCEA-b-P2EA block copolymer is able to self-assemble to form a thermoreversible hydrogel with a moderate chain length of PCEA-b-P2EA. Moreover, the thermoreversible characteristics of the hydrogel formed by the PCEA-b-P2EA can be modulated by the precursor solution concentration, the ionic strength, and the pH. We also show that a temperature change can be employed to modulate the gelation kinetics in the PCEA-b-P2EA thermoreversible hydrogel. The presence of C=O in the PCEA-b-P2EA block copolymer can greatly influence the gelation of the thermoreversible hydrogel c6a93da74d
