
Canon Lens Adjustment Software |BEST|

The first thing you do is adjust the lens pin and dial for focus. You'll learn how to move the focus points by looking at the included focusing instructions. It's pretty simple: turn the lens pin up or down to focus closer or farther away, then turn the dial to the right or left to set the new focus point. Turning the dial to the right and left will move you back and forth between the two focus points. Click the CPU button to enable the CPU. This allows the camera to automatically detect and/or adjust the focus or other lens parameters. To allow the camera to make the most of the CPU, you may want to select Auto-focus points from an Auto detect mode. If you select Auto detect mode, the camera will automatically detect the focus point or points based on the type of lenses and focal lengths you have connected to the dock. This is helpful if you happen to have lenses that the software might not be able to calibrate. You may want to also check the settings for your auto focus zone numbers. Mine were set to anything over 30. If you can't trust the lens align, this is probably the simpler way. Or you could try fiddling around with how far away from the edge your AF zones are and the circle target itself. Also by far, the easiest adjustment of all is to close the sun from in front of the camera. The sensors in the viewfinder and in most cameras, are pretty fragile in the extreme. Exposure is not actually determined by the sensor. Its not really even the light that hits the sensor. Its how much light gets through to the sensor. Exposure and brightness are determined by the lens and how much light the sensor can work with. And the lens adjusts the size of the image projected on the sensor. So less light coming through, smaller image.
