in this study, the effect of the number of brain metastases on patient survival was investigated. the 10-year survival rate of patients with brain metastases was 18% compared with the survival rate of patients with other metastases (28%). patients with brain metastases had a significantly shorter median survival than those without (5.7 vs. 25.6 months). the survival rate of patients with a single metastasis was significantly higher than that of patients with multiple brain metastases. furthermore, a single brain metastasis was not associated with a significantly higher survival rate than multiple brain metastases (27.6 vs. the median survival of patients with a single metastasis was significantly longer than that of patients with multiple metastases (19.4 vs. 7.2 months). the presence of leptomeningeal carcinomatosis did not affect the prognosis of patients with brain metastases ($p=0.418$). the srtm was contoured according to the rtog-endorsed brachial plexus contouring atlas, version 3 [3]. the right and left brachial plexi were contoured with a 3-5-mm diameter paint tool as separate rois in all patients. the rois were delineated by one radiation oncologist and reviewed and adjusted when considered appropriate by a second radiation oncologist. figure 2 shows an example of our bp-contouring technique. in our study, the patient skin was first removed with an incision about 1-1.5 cm wide, and the srtm was exposed. then, the srtm was removed, and the skin was closed. after the surgery, the mice did not demonstrate any signs of injury. no changes were observed in the body weight of the mice.
