Several reports suggest that the cerebral dopaminergic system is involved in the outcome of exposure to psychophysically stressful situations. Adrenergic receptors play an important role in the regulation of the activity of these receptors, and they may influence the action of drugs on the central nervous system. Changes in the adrenergic receptors in the brain after exposure to stress are unknown. To investigate the effect of stress, male Wistar rats were exposed to a stressful environment for 5 h daily for 15 days. The level of stress was measured by the elevated plus-maze (EPM) test. To evaluate the effect of stress in metabolic turnover, two experiments were performed on the 2-deoxy-D-glucose (2-DG) method. In experiment 1, rats were pre-treated with propranolol (12 mg/kg intraperitoneally) 30 min before being exposed to the EPM. In experiment 2, rats were injected 30 min before being exposed to the EPM with the alpha 2-antagonist yohimbine (0.5 or 1 mg/kg intraperitoneally) or vehicle. The effects of the stress were studied 24 h after the last exposure to the EPM. For experiment 1, the animal groups exposed to the EPM for 5 h daily for 15 days demonstrated increased adrenergic and muscarinic receptors in the hippocampus compared to the control. These changes were prevented by pre-treatment with propranolol. In experiment 2, the animals that were exposed to the EPM demonstrated reduced brain glucose metabolism in the cerebral cortex, hippocampus and the striatum after treatment with the alpha 2-antagonist yohimbine compared to rats treated with vehicle. The exposure to a stressful environment for 5 h daily for 15 days changed adrenergic receptor levels in the hippocampus and reduced brain glucose metabolism in the cerebral cortex, hippocampus and striatum. These alterations may be related to the reduced escape behavior displayed by these animals in the EPM test.Q: How to set up PFUser in Parse.com? I am trying to initialize PFUser on client side after user login on parse server. In detail, after user successfully login on parse server, I call PFUser.signUpInBackground method on client side. When I run Parse.
