or, for Cleopatra, this would have been perhaps the best and even the only way for both of them. because of the way she is portrayed by the lumineers, the video shows Cleopatra's death in a beautiful and moving way. but unfortunately, it's not actually the true Cleopatra, because the producers have changed the chronology of the events, they have made her marry Octavius Caesar after she had already been with him for sometime and they have also made Octavius' love for Cleopatra to be more than lustful. but the result is that this version of Cleopatra is not the one from history either. i'm afraid to say the best video of Cleopatra i have found is the one from the book Antony and Cleopatra. but it is still not the video i wanted. the video i wanted is the video from the play Antony and Cleopatra, and it's much more faithful to the events from history. but the video from the book is probably the best film of Cleopatra i can find. and this is a great film, it's very beautiful. but it's no longer in chronological order with the events from the play and it shows Octavius' love for Cleopatra much more than the one in the play, and i don't like that at all. i would say that this is the closest and the best version of Cleopatra i have found. for starters, they have kept the events from history almost completely intact, and secondly, they have not changed the character of Cleopatra, she is still a serious, strong and independent woman. but perhaps, most importantly, the video starts in the middle of the events from history, and continues the timeline of the play, therefore it shows the love of Cleopatra for Mark Antony at the beginning and then she's with Octavius at the end. so it's definitely the best Cleopatra i have found so far.

of all the Cleopatras i have seen, this one is the best, i think. i don't really know how to describe the video, because it has so many good things about it. but one thing it does have is that the video begins in the middle of the events from history, and it makes the video more believable and more realistic. because in the video, Mark Antony and Cleopatra are already together, they are already married, so it's much more believable. it also keeps the events from history in their proper chronological order, as it should be. and i think that's the most important thing that this video has about it. it keeps the events from history in their proper chronological order. the Cleopatra i liked the best was the one from the book, Antony and Cleopatra. but it wasn't in chronological order with the events from history, so the events from history were interspersed with the events from the book. and this was a big problem, because it made the video less believable, it was a bigger distance between the events from history and the ones from the book. and i found that it was difficult to believe that the events from history would happen if they were in between the ones from the book. in her most flamboyant move, she sent a messenger to her lover in Spain. the messenger announced that her child was dead, and she was dressed in mourning. Mark Antony was the chief mourner. he was the cause of her grief. in her most brutal move, she ordered her daughter's execution. the manner of the execution was brutal too. the daughter, who had been dragged from her mother's arms, was dressed as a man and paraded around the palace walls. she was then killed on the spot, and her mother then killed herself. Plutarch wrote that the sight of these two deaths moved the Roman soldiers to tears. 5ec8ef588b
