The rf pcb toolbox is a source of motivation to the students and young researchers in the fields of electronic, microwave, and radio-frequency engineering. rf pcb toolbox also helps to bridge the gap between eda and experimentalists and researchers in the areas of antenna design, mm-, microwave and millimeter-wave imaging and polarimetry, and passive components design. the rf pcb toolbox will help engineers to design electronic components with parameterized or arbitrary geometry, including distributed passive structures such as traces, bends, and vias. the toolbox provides a frequency-domain analysis of parasitic effects and a spatial-domain analysis of coupling and dispersion. the rf pcb toolbox can be used as a standalone pcb design environment. it is compatible with all major cad and eda tools and can be integrated in any computer-aided design (cad) and electronic design automation (eda) system. a native toolbox api is provided for easy integration into third-party tools.
