We are also getting used to large graphics memory solutions which simply don't cut it for many scenarios. But what if you just wanted a solid, high-end solution? What if you wanted a graphics card that was capable of providing you with excellent performance in both more casual and more demanding games, but without the unnecessary excess which is often hidden in a high-end card? This is what GIGABYTE has done, via the introduction of the OCULUS MAX-Q AORUS GeForce GTX 1070 graphics card. With a chip based on the GP104 graphics core we are looking at 10.000 million transistors, an effective 256-bit memory controller, a 240-bit GDDR5 memory interface, 14 GB of extremely fast graphics memory and a 256-bit interface for a total of 1024 bits. All this power is tucked into a small form factor which means that this is a high-end card that is capable of being used in both the home and the office.
