As a rule of thumb, we can say that every dog has three main learning curves. The first is how to eat. The second is how to defecate (yes, this is separate). Third, and third, and third... is the new behavior. And if it's been a while since you've worked on one of these, chances are you have all three on the list. With that in mind, you've got to start somewhere. Each of these steps will take you closer to the desired behavior. Step 1 For introductions, your best bet is to make the behavior seem natural, as opposed to prodding or redirecting. Do an about face and allow your dog to sniff you. If he's even a little curious about you, he may be tempted to lick you. It's most likely to happen when your dog is tired, or you're tired. But it's also one of the best ways to get your dog to associate you with food or comfort. If he's done this enough, he may start to look for your hand to get this behavior. Step 2 Once your dog is comfortable with food, you can teach it to sit. Start by having him sniff a cookie. That's not too scary, is it? When he 79a2804d6b
