Stopped-flow fluorimetry: a convenient, sensitive method to measure the kinetics of many biochemical reactions. A novel application of stopped-flow fluorimetry is described. The method is based on the rapid mixing of a reagent system with the substrate. The rate of change in fluorescence as a function of time is a measure of the substrate concentration at the time of mixing. One molecule of substrate is therefore made visible in two or more time points during the mixing. Data are presented for the measurement of the kinetics of the following reactions: a) the inhibition of aldose reductase by imidazole and b) the inhibition of dipeptidyl peptidase II by dipeptides with aromatic moieties at the N terminus. Both methods are applicable to a wide variety of biochemical and biophysical reactions, providing a fast, convenient, and sensitive alternative to other techniques.

DUBAI (Reuters) - Iran on Monday urged other governments to freeze or repatriate assets of several foreign-listed Iranian companies that the Islamic Republic suspects of being involved in an $8 billion scandal over gold and silver smuggling. The first Iranian official to make a public announcement about the case against Bank Melli was the head of Iran's judiciary, Gholamhossein Mohseni-Ejei, who said the Supreme Court of Iran had referred a case to the judiciary. The vice president for international affairs at Iran's judiciary, Saeed Mortazavi, accused the officials of giving false evidence during a military trial of seven suspects in which one has already been sentenced to death. On Monday, the foreign ministry said the results of a judicial investigation showed that $4.2 billion in Iranian central bank reserves had been transferred into accounts of the Iranian Central Bank's international department. "We have no doubt that due to the bank's failure
