The effect of individual differences in heart rate on the number of nerves supplying certain vascular beds was investigated in three groups of humans. Electrophysiological recordings of autonomic nerve activity were obtained from the cervical sympathetic trunk, the left ventricular epicardium and the right femoral artery. The heart rate in the subjects varied between 34 and 132 beats/min and their weights between 46 and 97 kg. The mean number of active nerves supplying the cervical sympathetic trunk was 3.6 +/- 0.3, the mean number of active nerves supplying the left ventricle was 4.0 +/- 0.3, and the mean number of active nerves supplying the femoral artery was 4.5 +/- 0.3. The mean values obtained were not significantly different (p greater than 0.05) from each other. The heart rate was found to have a statistically significant correlation with the number of nerves supplying each vascular bed. For the femoral artery the correlation was $r = 0.73$, $n = 15$, p less than 0.01, for the cervical sympathetic trunk $r = 0.78$, $n = 15$, p less than 0.01, for the left ventricle $r = 0.69$, $n = 15$, p less than 0.01 and for the epicardium $r = 0.54$, $n = 15$, p greater than 0.05. This correlation indicates that when the heart rate is high, the activity of certain autonomic nerves is increased.St. Charles Township, Mercer County, Illinois St. Charles Township is located in Mercer County, Illinois.
