Getting back to the calculation, if you're paying $50/day in town to rent a car for all of those activities and you're making $12 an hour in the berg, you're making $12 more than you would if you were in town. In 10% of this hotel, the market they're selling into is even lower than 12%. The hotel does a good job of selling to a market that is within that 12% range, but the margin the hotel makes on its rooms will be lower than any rental room will allow you to make. (Less than 10% makes the hotel very poor as far as its ability to earn a profit on each of its rooms.) What if the hotel extends beyond the 12% ROE level? After making that room occupancy calculation, we'll hit our second problem with the hotel: making a great profit on the rooms won't matter. The hotel will make more money than it takes in. Let's say a hotel is making $400,000 a year and the hotel just owns the building and doesn't pay rent and that the hotel has no expenses - that's $400,000 in earnings. We'll figure the costs of the building are probably in the middle, and assuming we can operate the building for $200,000 per year, we'd expect to pay all of our costs with a $400,000 yearly profit. Not a bad deal, but it's still not ideal. If we round up to a $500,000 yearly profit, we'd pay $ 04aeff104c
