It's full of flavour and packed with nutrition – with over 100% of the recommended daily amount of iron, and high in fibre. This recipe is inspired by the Asian style of cooking which uses some healthy meats like chicken and shrimp. Both of these meats are low in fat, high in protein and contain lots of vital nutrients. When buying shrimp, make sure you buy raw and peeled pieces to prevent any health worries or health problems later down the track. I tried my first oyster about 4 years ago after reading that they are a great source of Omega-3 fatty acids which help to prevent heart problems and strokes, and make your skin glow. I was surprised to find that they are also packed with vitamins and minerals which include Vitamin A, B, and D. I recently discovered that the health benefits are even greater when you eat them with fermented foods – a type of probiotic that are packed with beneficial bacteria. While there are many probiotic foods, I love their delicate flavour, especially when combined with natural foods. Crab has long been associated with seafood lovers. It's a popular crab dish in
